In the middle of the coral reef someone had spelled out a message with shells,
"Swim where you wish but don't touch a fish."

So Emma swam further through the ocean past the fluorescent coral reefs and at the end she found a under water territory.
It tempted she swam deeper into the territory and at the end was the most astonishing fish.

It looked so beautiful and so majestic that Emma reached out her hand and touched it. The majestic fish felt like silky velvet. At that very moment, Emma gapped because she remembered what she had been told.

Instantly she heard a loud baby crying sound. She in her ears she felt nails down a whiteboard.
Emma trembled and swam away from the horrible screaming sound. Crying the slippery fish she swam through the rainbow coral reef past the blue white whales swarmed by the furious turtles swimming after her. Just in time she found the portal door that led her back to her own world.

Molly's Bracelet

Molly raced downstairs to see what Santa had given her. She was so excited! Then Molly saw a tiny circle from Dad. "Open it," said Dad. It was a friendship bracelet with letters saying MOLLY and a cute cat face that sparkles in the sunlight. "I love it!" shouted Molly. She had way more presents to open than her friend Olivia. Then Molly gave Dad a friendship bracelet too. They were matching. "Thanks Molly!" screamed Dad. His bracelet had letters saying DAD on it and it also had a little glowing dog keychain on it. Dad started to tell Molly something. "Molly you have got to look after it. You know how careless you are." Molly agreed. She would try her very best not to lose her very valuable bracelet. Molly also told her dad to be careful too. Molly is not the only one that loses things.

ARCHDUKE FERDINAND MURDERED

28TH JUNE 1914

Breaking news! Archduke Ferdinand is dead! He and his wife Sophie were assassinated by Gavrilo Princip — a member of the Black Hand — yesterday. Europe is already preparing for war, this may be the start of something big. Here is what we know so far.

Archduke Ferdinand is in charge of Austria-Hungary, and they want to take over Serbia. A group of Serbian men, called the Black Hand Gang, threw a grenade at Ferdinand's car, but it missed and hit the wrong car. It injured many innocent people. After lunch, Franz and Sophie went to check on the people that the grenade injured in hospital. On the way the driver took a wrong turn, which was when they met a member of the Black Hand, Gavrilo Princip, and he shot them both.

Empires

Many countries in Europe, including Great Britain, have already taken over and own other countries. This has caused tension and has become a competition to grow empires.

Arms Race

In Europe, countries and empires want to defend themselves, so they are spending money to build better weapons and vehicles.

Alliances

Everyone is nervous about others taking advantage of their weapons that they had finished, so they have started to make alliances. Germany, Austria-Hungary and Italy have formed the Triple Alliance, and France, Russia and Britain have formed the Triple Entente.

"Ellie, do you mind taking the dog on a walk? He's been itching to go out," reminded mum. With a sigh, Ellie came downstairs and walked outside. On the doorstep, she attached the leash and began to walk down the road, observing all the other houses. After a few minutes, she managed to pull her eyes away from her neighbour's house to be met with a sign that said in bold letters, WARNING: quicksand ahead. Ellie rolled her eyes sarcastically and let Buddy waddle into the forest. Her mum never questioned it because she was oblivious as to where they were actually going; Ellie always told her they went down the road. The beauty of the forest was too tempting to resist.

As soon as Ellie walked in the door, she grabbed the leash, eagerly attaching it to Buddy's collar. She let Buddy run faster than light itself, until they arrived in the forest. The familiar smell of fresh pine as the evergreens breathed lifted through the gentle breeze. Robins sang in harmony as if in an orchestra, and the intricate detailing of the bark created masterpieces. The wind gifted them a lasting sense of calm that engulfed the forest. The bright, healthy grass swayed like it was in a funco and was helping spread it.

The mighty trees hung overhead, like they had seen millenias pass by in seconds. The forest sighed in time with the animals creating a symphony of sounds that released a wave of joy; it flowed beautifully and broke boundaries. The distinct, metallic smell of the earth continued to flow throughout the land, creating an unmistakable aroma. The forest was a magical place where Ellie felt like she belonged.

Suddenly, the wind howled and sharply whipped across her face. It felt as if the forest itself was screaming. Rain was beating faster than her heart and the once beautiful sun was now covered, casting a spell as cold as ice across the land, weaving between the trees. The lightning threatened everything in its path, while destroying all the joy and calm there once was. The forest was thrown into complete chaos.

Ellie, who was startled by the sudden storm, began to lead Buddy away from the danger of the woods but she tripped on a branch and fell into a hole of mud. She muttered something under her breath, but when she tried to pull her foot out, she couldn't. Her stomach froze and became a pit as her leg was being sucked in further. Further. Further...

The rain refused to calm and the storm raged but Ellie's leg was knee deep. She screamed continuously but the rain drowned her out. Just then, when things couldn't get any worse, she lost grip on the leash and Buddy ran into the forest. Her hope was fading as rapidly as her leg was, and she used all her strength to pull herself out of the forest's prison, but her chances were grim. Salty tears glided down her face, and the icy wind froze them in place. They blended with the dark rain creating a shine by, only illuminated by the slight sun hidden in the cruel darkness.

Unexpectedly, Buddy came running back, a humongous branch in his mouth. He ran to Ellie and gestured for her to grab on; Ellie gripped tighter than ever before and pulled. She was shaking uncontrollably and cold sweat dripped down her forehead. Her heart hammered inside her chest and pain shot through her veins. Her screams echoed around the forest and the only thing she felt was intense pain.

Slowly but surely her leg came out. Needless to say, she was soaking and covered head to toe in mud and quicksand. Her heart rate had skyrocketed and her breathing was shallow.

When she looked around everything was dull and dark. How long had she been gone for? She sat down and held Buddy in her lap. Ellie couldn't stop her thoughts from racing; they bounced back and forth for what felt like forever.

Eventually, she decided to walk home. When she walked to her mother was hawking and her eyes were red and puffy. When she turned to look at her she screamed, "Where have you been?! Look at the state of you. Go upstairs and get changed. Gosh, I was so worried." "S-s-sorry mom I was walking and went into t-t-the forest, I fell into quicksand," Ellie stuttered out. She then walked up the winding stairs sheepishly.
