Although the war didn't start very well for the British people, Winston Churchill used his words to help people feel positive and keep spirits up.

His speeches encouraged people to be strong and courageous.

At the moment, our lives are very different, and things are different to how we want them to be. However, they will get better.

Today, we are going to write a speech to make people feel better, and to think about things that they have to look forward to.

On the paper in the middle of your tables, write down things that people might be looking forward to doing once this time is over.

Dear everyone,

Things are a little bit strange at the moment but don't forget that there is lots to look forward to in the future.
